U.S. Patent and Trademark Office PTOL-303 (Rev. 08-06)

For Claim 6, Applicants argue intended use for the device or apparatus. Applicants argue that Allen et al does not disclose the applicant's invention. Applicants refer to Allen et al disclosing encapsulating a biosensor (See Column 3 lines 48-55). Applicants did not also disclose in the same sentence Allen et al states that the copolymer membranes are used for covering the biosensor, which inherently is on top of a substrate and also must come in contact with the physiologically substance being analyzed, or being encapsulated.

For Claim 8, the same reasoning is used to reject Claim 6.

For Claim 10 & 11, Applicants argue that Wagner et al does not aid in the rejection of Claim 6. Examiner respectfully disagrees.

Allen et al discloses a biosensor which is used in vivo. The biosensor of Allen et al comprises the limitations of Claim 6, but does not disclose what the (softstate) conductive electrodes are made of (although it would be obvious as to what materials would be used for electrodes to one of ordinary skill in the art).

Wagner et al aids in this deficiency by disclosing a biosensor, covered with a hydrophobic polymer, in which the substrate is made of a variety of different metals being claimed. It would have been ovious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the biosensor of Allen et al with the biosensor of the metals of Wagner et al because Wagner et al also discloses that the biosensor may be used to contact physiologically active substances in vivo (See Column 2 line 63-Column 3 line 9).
